Capital: Edinburgh Time: GMT+1

Background: The crowns of Scotland and England were united in 1603, and the governments of the two countries in 1707; Scotland has retained, however, its own legal system, its own Church, a substantially different education system, and the right to issue its own bank notes. Since 1999, a Scottish parliament of 129 seats has sat independently of the parliament at Westminster. Scotland is bordered on the north by the Atlantic Ocean; on the east by the North Sea; on the south-east by England; on the south by the Solway Firth, which partly separates it from England, and by the Irish Sea; and on the west by the North Channel of the Irish Sea which separates it from the island of Ireland, and by the Atlantic Ocean. As a geopolitical entity Scotland includes 186 nearby islands, a majority of which are contained in three groups—the Hebrides, also known as the Western Isles (Eilean Siar), situated off the western coast; the Orkney Islands, situated off the north-eastern coast; and the Shetland Islands, situated north-east of the Orkney Islands. The largest of the other islands is Arran, located in the Firth of Clyde, off the west coast. Edinburgh is the capital of Scotland, and a leading cultural and economic centre.

Location: Scotland, country, administrative division of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, occupying the northern third of the island of Great Britain.

Map References: United Kingdom

Area: The land area of Scotland, including the islands, is 78,790 sq km (30,420 sq mi). The figure includes some 1,692 sq km (653 sq mi) of inland water

Natural Resources: Scotland, like much of Britain, has significant reserves of coal. It also possesses large deposits of zinc, chiefly in the south. The soil is generally rocky and infertile, except for that of the Central Lowlands. Northern Scotland contains most of the United Kingdom's largest hydroelectric generating stations. Following the discovery of substantial oil deposits in the North Sea in the late 1970s, a sizeable offshore oil industry grew up and became a vital component of the UK economy as well as an important part of the Scottish economy. Forestry and fishing resources are also important.

Population: Scotland has a population of about 5,119,200 (1999). The average population density is about 65 people per sq km (168 per sq mi). The highest density is in the Central Lowlands, where nearly three quarters of Scots live, and the lowest is in the Highlands, where densities are as low as 8 people per sq km (21 per sq km). About two thirds of the population are urban dwellers.

Nationality: Scots.

Ethnic Groups: The people of Scotland, like those of Britain in general, are descendants of various northern tribes, including the Picts, Celts, Scandinavians, and, to a lesser extent, Romans. Scotland is a mixed rural-industrial society. Scots divide themselves into Highlanders, who consider themselves of "purer" Celtic blood and retain a strong feeling for the clan, and Lowlanders. There are strong Scandinavian influences in the Orkney Islands and Shetland islands.

Religions: The Church of Scotland, a Presbyterian (Protestant) denomination, is the official Church, with an adult communicant membership of more than 752,000. The Roman Catholic Church is second in importance with some 744,600 adherents. Other leading denominations are the Episcopal Church of Scotland, a province of the Anglican Church, Congregationalist, Baptist, Methodist, and United Free, as well as a number of small Presbyterian Churches, which in the past formed as breakaway groups from the Church of Scotland. There are small numbers of Muslims, Hindus, Sikhs, and Jews in the cities.

Languages: Scottish Language, dialect of the English language, Scottish Gaelic.

Economy: Many aspects of the economy of Scotland are covered in the article United Kingdom. The currency of the United Kingdom, the pound sterling, is the legal tender of Scotland but the country can also issue its own banknotes; Scotland has retained a £1 banknote. Both agriculture and industry are important in the economy of Scotland, but the main growth sector has been the services industries in recent years. The chief exports are oil and natural gas, chemicals, and manufactured goods, especially whisky, electronics equipment, clothing, machinery, and textiles. Scotland has experienced the same pressure on its traditional industries, particularly shipbuilding, as Wales and the north of England. However, since 1987 economic growth in Scotland has on average been greater than in the United Kingdom as a whole, and it was less affected by the recession in the early 1990s than other areas. In part this has been a consequence of the new jobs and industries created by North Sea oil, and in part a result of Scotland's success in attracting high-technology industries. The centre of Scottish trade unionism is the Scottish Trades Union Congress, with an affiliated membership of around 980,000.

Industries: The other traditional heavy industries of Scotland's industrialization, shipbuilding and steel-making, have also largely been consigned to history—although the building of rigs for the North Sea oilfields and gasfields has enabled a number of the former Clydeside shipyards to stay in business. The decline of these traditional industries, however, has been paralleled by a growth of new industries such as chemicals, light mechanical and instrument engineering, and, especially, electronics. Many of the world's leading companies in the electronics field, such as IBM and Motorola, have located to Scotland, notably around Glasgow and West Lothian. By the late 1990s, more than 200 electronics companies were operating in Scotland, making the country one of the main focuses of the industry in Western Europe. In particular, Scotland is a major source of computers and peripheral equipment, accounting for more than half of all exports in this area. The electronics industry as a whole accounts for around 13 per cent of manufacturing jobs, 19 per cent of manufacturing output, and 17 per cent of manufacturing investment in Scotland. A number of traditional industries, including the manufacture of food and drink products and of textiles (especially high-quality tweed and knitwear) and hosiery, remain important. Prime among the first group is the whisky industry. Scotland has some 110 distillers, located mainly in the north-east. About 80 per cent of their output is exported to more than 200 countries. Export earnings from whisky amounted to some US$3.3 billion (£2.1 billion) a year (about 20 per cent of Scotland's manufactured export earnings) in the mid-1990s, making it one of Britain's top foreign-exchange earners.

Currency: 1 British pound = 100 pence

Railways: About 4,376 km (2,720 mi) of railways serve Scotland.

Ports and Harbors: Glasgow.

Airports: Many transatlantic flights use Prestwick Airport near Glasgow, Britain's fourth-busiest airport. Edinburgh and Aberdeen airports are also among the ten busiest airports in Britain.

Visa: see Visa in UK section.

Duty Free: see Duty Free in UK section.

Health: see Health in UK section
