Capital: Madison Time: GMT - 6

Background: Wisconsin entered the Union on May 29, 1848, as the 30th state. Manufacturing became the state's chief economic activity following World War II, but at the start of the 1990s Wisconsin remained the nation's leading dairy state and also a major producer of corn. Milwaukee and Madison, the capital, were the state's largest cities and among its many important industrial and commercial centres. The state is named after the Wisconsin River, the name of which is derived from the French version of an Ojibwa term that may mean either "gathering of the waters" or "place of the beaver". Wisconsin's nickname, the "Badger State", refers not to the badgers that live there but to miners who burrowed like badgers into the hillsides in search of lead in the 1820s. The state's major cities are Madison (the capital), Milwaukee, Green Bay, Racine, and Kenasha.

Population: According to the 1990 census, Wisconsin had 4,891,769 inhabitants, an increase of 4 per cent over 1980. The estimated population of the state for 1997 was 5,169,677. The average population density in 1990 was 29 people per sq km (75 per sq mi); most of the northern third of the state, however, had a much lower density of inhabitants. Whites made up 92.2 per cent of Wisconsin's population and blacks 5 per cent; additional population groups included 38,986 Native Americans, 7,354 people of Chinese ancestry, 6,914 people of Asian Indian origin, 5,618 people of Korean extraction, and 3,690 people of Filipino descent. Approximately 93,200 people were of Latino background.

Location: Wisconsin (state), one of the Great Lakes states of the United States, bordered on the north by Lake Superior and the Upper Peninsula of Michigan; on the east by Lake Michigan; on the south by Illinois; and on the west by Iowa and Minnesota. The Menominee River forms the north-eastern boundary and the Mississippi and St Croix rivers form parts of the western boundary.

Area: Wisconsin has an area of 169,644 sq km (65,500 sq mi); 5.4 per cent of the land area is owned by the federal government. The state is irregular in shape; its extreme dimensions are about 480 km (300 mi) from north to south and about 450 km (280 mi) from east to west. Elevations range from 177 m (581 ft), along the shore of Lake Michigan, to 595 m (1,951 ft), at the top of Timms Hill in the north-central part of the state; the approximate mean elevation is 320 m (1,050 ft). The state has a shoreline of some 1,085 km (675 mi).

Industries: Sand and gravel are among the most valuable mineral resources, and the state leads the nation in the production of abrasive stone. Other minerals found include limestone for cement, iron ore, copper, gold, silver, lead, zinc, clay, and peat. Wisconsin is an important agricultural state, typically ranking among the top ten states in annual farm income. The sale of livestock and livestock products (notably beef cattle, pigs, turkeys, milk) accounts for about 70 per cent of the value of the state's yearly farm production. Leading crops are corn, hay, potatoes, soya beans, wheat, barley, tobacco, beets, beans, peas, cucumbers, apples, cherries, and cranberries. Wisconsin also produces much honey and has a milk-farming industry.

Forest resources are extensive. Nearly 70 per cent of the annual wood harvest is made up of hardwoods (including maple, elm, basswood, cottonwood, aspen, and birch), most of which is sawn into prepared timber. Industrially owned forest is predominantly made up of softwoods (including white, red, and jack pine; spruce; and hemlock), used in the pulp and paper industry.

There is a small fishing industry, with a commercial catch valued in the early 1990s at US$5 million annually. Major catches are whitefish, lake trout, perch, chubs, alewives, and carp. Commercial river fishing yields mainly catfish, bullheads, and buffalo fish.

Leading manufactured goods are industrial machinery, construction equipment, paper and paper products, metal goods, food products, transport equipment, electronic equipment, primary metals, printed materials, chemicals, wood products, plastics, and precision instruments.
